

Do Pacific Island employment patterns show persistent male dominance across economic sectors?

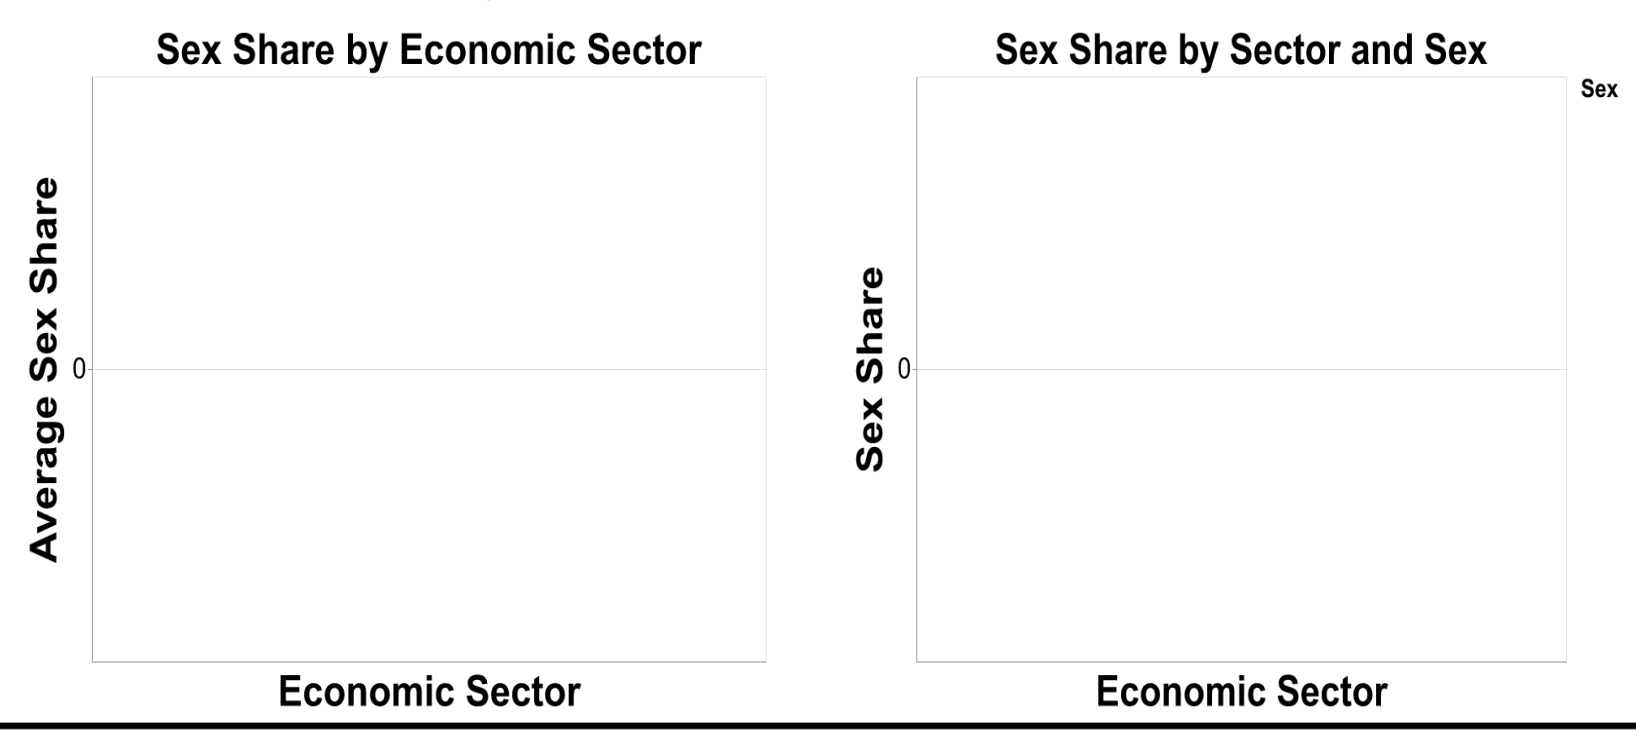

INTRODUCTION

This poster analyzes employment and gender distribution in Pacific Island countries. We examine employment patterns and gender shares across various nations. Detailed insights into gender representation within economic sectors are provided. Female employment trends across sectors and countries are specifically highlighted.

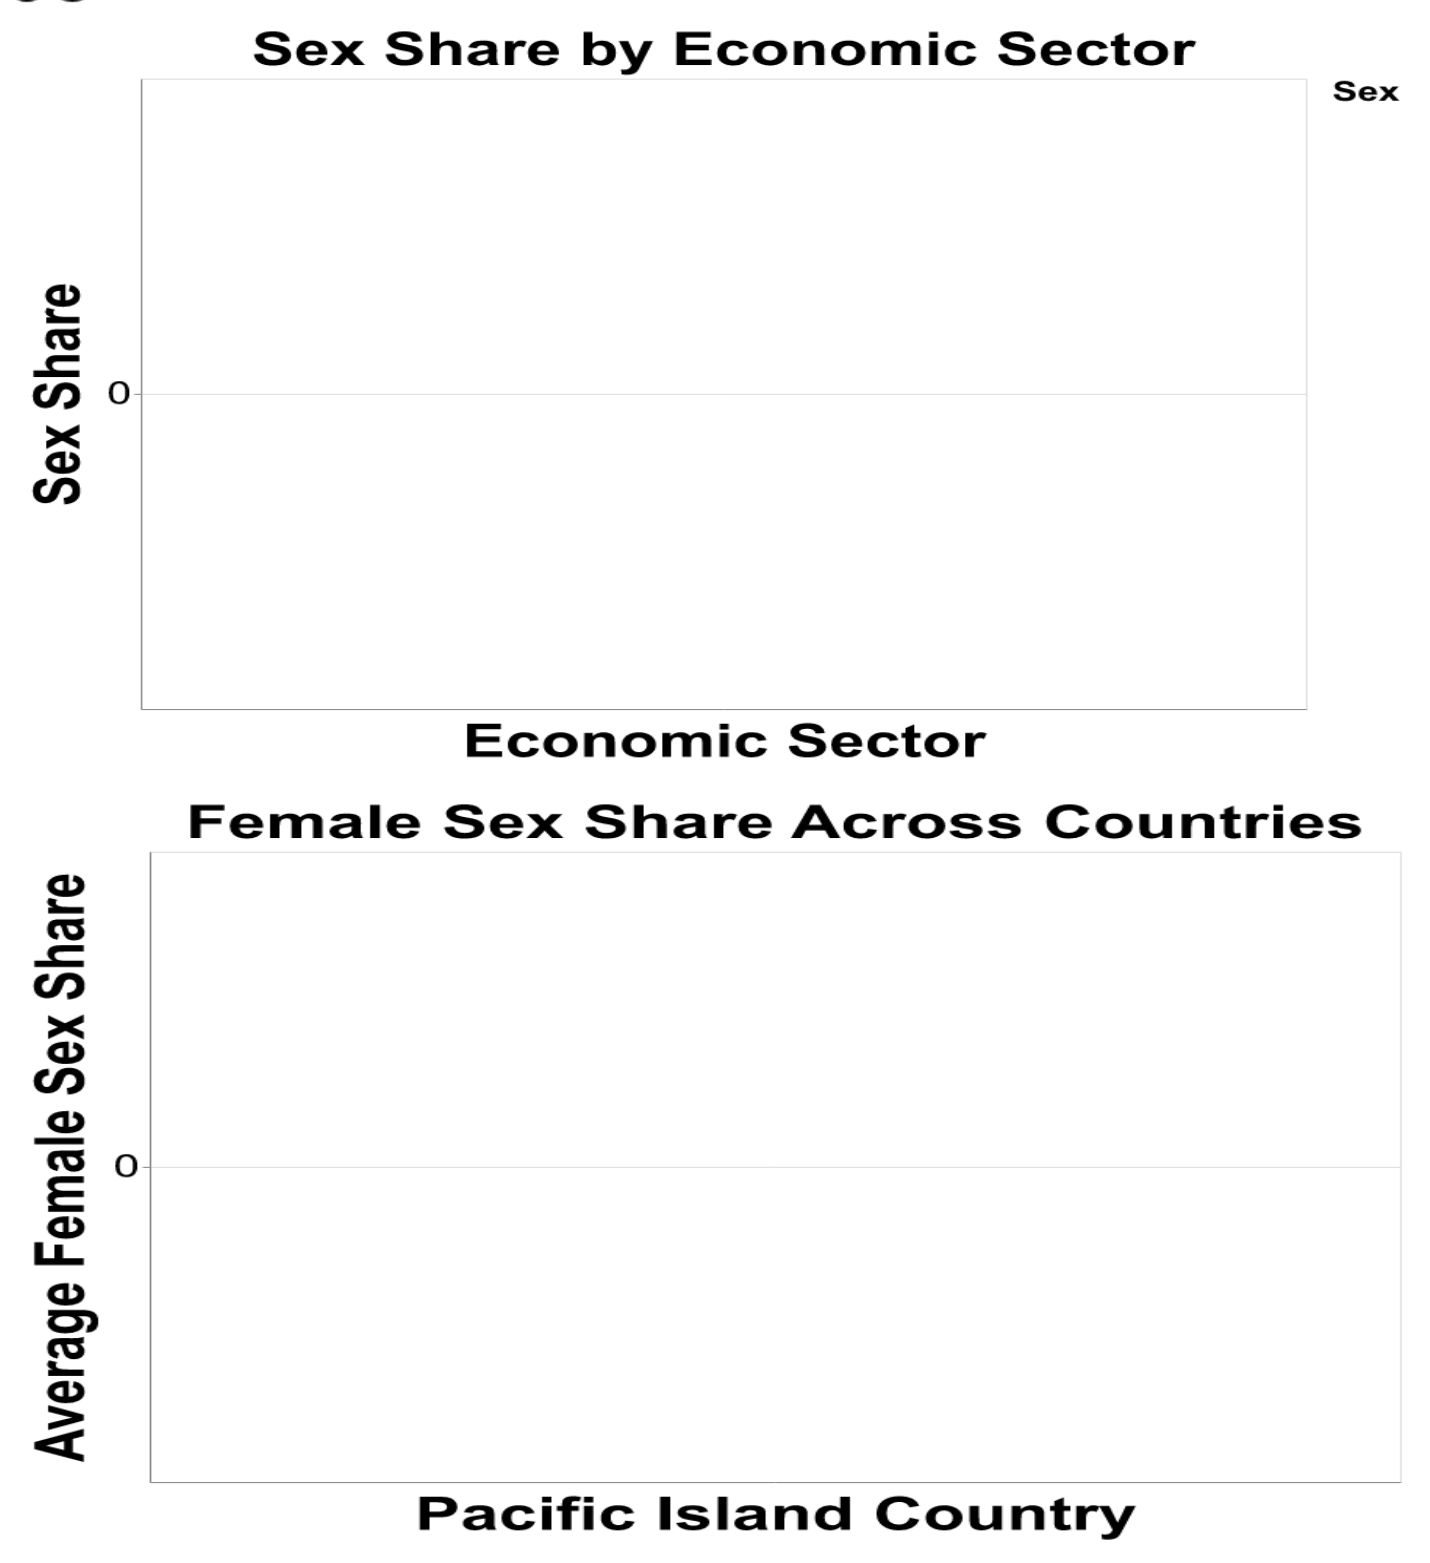

01 Total employment and gender distribution vary significantly across Pacific Island countries and sectors.

02 Economic sectors show distinct patterns in overall and specific male/female employment shares.

03 Female employment shares differ across economic sectors and show country-specific variations.

CONCLUSION

Among Pacific Island Countries, Solomon Islands employs the most persons, while Niue employs the fewest. Cook Islands and Palau show the lowest Sex Share among Pacific Island Countries. Overall, the Sex Male accounts for the highest number of employed persons. In the Economic sector, Transportation and Storage shows the highest Male Sex share. Within Economic sectors, Accommodation and Food shows the lowest Female Sex share. However, across Pacific Island Countries, Female Sex Share is higher for females.